The President shouk hands very cordelly with Mr. Gunnison, then with Mr. Gunnison, then with Mr. Schieren and then, spying Inspector Cortright, an old favorite of his from the days when he was Police Commissioner of this city, he shook hands with him and told him he was very glad to see him again. The other members of the Reception Committee were then greeted, after which Mr. Gunnison took the President's arm, the Jersey City police lined up in a hollow square and the march to the boat began.

There was a big crowd of people, some waiting for trains, some fust seming in outside the gates, and when they saw the President they at my a great cheering. The President dofted his hat several times and then went aboard the Annex boat for Brooklyn. No one but the party was allowed on board. The boat was gay with flags and there was a great tooting of whisties in the river and a great outpurst of cheering from the shore when the Predent's own enters we will me. Greets Old Police Friend.

Order of Dips, as some one called them, a short, dark man of about thirty-five years, arrayed in a long black gown, waded into the ohilly water of the bay until it reached his armpits. The faithful formed a semi-circle on the beach with ends touching the water line and as the name was called out the candidate for dipping emerged from his candidate for dipping emerged from his room in the bathhouses. The men were arrayed in long black gowns over trousers and shoes. They waded into the water and were immersed by the mysterious leader.

The touch of the cold water made most of the women hysterical and they emerged from their plunges beneath the waves laughing and shricking. "Hallelujah!" The women wore white gowns which wrapped soggly around them after the wetting.

A basket picnic in the grove followed the finish of the twenty-ninth baptism.

Most of the mysterious dippers were derman or of German descent.
